DELUSIONAL BATMAN FAN READS WAY TOO MUCH INTO CIDER NAME

ERIE, CO — Local comic book fan Ted Nackle has spent the last week trying to decipher “The Riddler’s secret message” in the name of The Old Mine’s newest offering in cans and on draft, Pineapple Mango Hard Cider.

“First off,” Nackle told InCIDER, “the Riddler is a real guy. Second off, he sends coded messages. Third off, and don’t tell anyone, but I’m actually The Batman.”

34 year-old Nackle has been up all hours in his “Batcave” (read: his grandma’s basement guest bedroom) trying to put together a message from the delicious drink’s descriptive name. “Something, something... Man Go to... Pine... Apple... in Cider... I mean... it’s not clear, but it’s obvious he’s calling me the APPLE MAN and saying where to GO... but where is the PINE?!??”

Mike Yeager at the Old Mine claims that though there isn’t a hidden message in the drink’s name, it is full of delicious fruit flavors infused into their famous Colorado Sunshine Hard Cider.

“I mean, I guess if he wants to read something into this, he can,” Yeager said. “I just hope he also realizes it tastes really good.”

In related news, Nackle’s friends report being less bothered by him claiming to be a superhero than him constantly putting “the” in front of “Batman.”
